In the 1930's Emil Artin was not completely free to make all of the choices about how to invest his mathematical energies. In particular, in 1937, Artin and his family emigrated to America. This talk explore Artin's transition to America, his time at Notre Dame, Indiana, and Princeton Universities, his work with students, and his broader contributions to American mathematics. Along the way, it highlights a beautiful blend of teaching and research, of old and new colleagues, and of a shared commitment to a mathematical community.
